Prohibition will never prohibit so long as people can prescribe patent medicines for themselves.

The Thaw trial without Evelyn's testimony will be like a musical comedy without the chorus.

The woman who insists on having the last word at an auction sale generally finds that talk is not cheap.

A new card game is said to be called "Quit." It is to be hoped that the players will know when it is time to.

On the morning after an election the state of Pennsylvania always reminds one of Texas, because the returns are so different.

Every time some man over 60 performs a feat that seems out of the ordinary, Dr. Osler finds his name in the papers once more.

Australia's discovery of a "spouting bore" is not attracting much attention in this country. They are too numerous here to be registered as a novelty.

"A Brief Description of New York," published in 1670, sold the other day for $1,750. And there was much less to describe in those days than there is now.

Now that an inventor has perfected an automobile that will run on both land and water, the knoekers will find even the man in a rowboat putting his car in.

From the remarks handed out to them by Mr. Taft, advising them to become good losers, the Filipinos can readily guess what the future has in store for them.

A writer on medical topics says special care of the ears is necessary in the winter. That's just the time of year most people persist in pouring hard-luck stories into ours.

After a record-breaking run, the Lusitania delivered $10,000,000 in gold at New York last week, but a good many of us are still waiting for our ship to come in.

About this time that Texas father of forty children must be looking forward to Christmas with feelings that the ordinary married man is a stranger to.

When speaking of the "working classes," it might be well for orators to indicate whether they mean those who work for a living or those who work those who work for a living.

One statistician has discovered that there has been a 40 per cent decrease in the cost of funerals, but it will be just like perverse humanity to neglect this opportunity to get 'em while they are cheap.

A Tucson man fell downstairs at his home the other day, and, striking on his right hip pocket, in which he had a bunch of keys, he was badly hurt. Still, he was probably glad he didn't have a quart bottle in that pocket.

"He who hoards money at a time like this doesn't deserve to have any," remarks an exchange. The workingman who succeeds in hoarding money at a time like this has got a remarkably economical wife.

A territorial paper is worried because the goosebone presages a mild winter, while the fur on the foxes indicate that we will have a hard winter. In that case, it seems to us, the foxiest move would be to fill the cial bin.

A Phoenix woman with a knack for figures has discovered that she walks over seven miles a day while performing her ordinary household duties. We would like to see her estimate of the miles covered while trying to match a bit of ribbon.

THE PRIESTS AND THE PROPHETS
An article in the Atlantic Monthly treats of "The Ideal Minister" from the viewpoint of the layman. The writer points out the weak points as he sees them in the present-day minister as regards his effectiveness in his work and his influence upon the world about him.

"He lives and moves and has his being in an atmosphere charged with potential self-deceptions; social, intellectual, moral." "The effect of mental seclusion in the ministry is intellectual self-deception." "His mode of thinking may grow away from that of his brother men, and, his life wounded by the indifference of others, may shrink into itself to tread alone with melancholy persistence, the lonely path of the intellectual Ishmaelite."

This is a popular theme with the pews, the press and those outside the pale of the church. But the problem which confronts the minister is, in fact, no different from that of other similar vocations. Who ever is in the position of stating opinions, without having to specifically defend them, is in the same danger of "intellectual self-deception." The newspaper writer who shuts himself in from his fellow men, seeing only the few and acquiring the student habit, soon talks, as it were, to his congregation. He grows didactic, opinionated, narrow and self-deceived. He forgets all he ever knew of human impulses, the motives that wield men's minds, the practical viewpoint which changes with conditions and becomes an authority only to himself.

The teacher falls into the same pit of making life a routine, and soon makes of his mental away over his pupils an intellectual authority by divine right. To question his correctness is insurrection, and if by chance proven to be mistaken he takes refuge in an offended dignity.

Like the preacher and the writer, he has the great misfortune of having it all to himself with no one to talk back, and a constantly narrowing conception of the personalities that surround him and which he would influence.

There is nothing so intellectually wholesome and stimulating as contradiction, and no one can know the minds he would influence without hearing from them and meeting them in more or less combative relations. No one can cloak himself with a superior authority and long hold the willing receptivity of his audience.

"Humanity outgrows its priests, but not its prophets." In this day, if a man has a message, he will find a willing audience, but he must meet it on the level and deal with it on the square. He may easily deceive himself, but he cannot long deceive the people to whom he would be a guiding influence.

VERY NEAR

Why should anyone be grum? Why let peace and joy be dumb? Now's the time to make things hum, Thanksgiving Day is coming.

Everyone has some complaint, Not one man in ten's a saint, Oft we're from life's burdens faint, Though Thanksgiving's coming

But for this time let us count All we've got from fortune's fount, See how much our blessings mount, Thanksgiving Day is coming.

We will open, sure, our eyes With a very real surprise, When we see those blessings rise, Thanksgiving Day is coming.

When we're counting up our store, We will see, then, more and more How much to be thankful for, Thanksgiving Day is coming.

Let it find us with bright face, And glad hearts to do it grace, O'er all troubles give it place, Thanksgiving Day is coming.

Let each heart in all the land Join in one harmonious band, Sing in happy chorus grand, "Thanksgiving Day is coming."

—Baltimore American.

Repatries of Washington Children
Evidently there was a severance of friendly relations between two of a group of small girls who had a minute before been romping about the sward in Dupont circle, for just as the writer approached the daughter of a southern legislator called out to her small companion from the west:
"The girl with the red dress on is a cowgirl! The girl with the red dress on is a cowgirl!"

Again and again the taunting challenge was hurled at the red-frocked western maid, who finally, with one supreme effort at self-control, retorted:
"Oh, very well, then, the girl who is a-hollerin' is a sheep! The girl who is a-hollerin' is a sheep! I'd rather be a cowgirl than a sheep, for the president is fond of cowboys and cowgirls, but not even a secretary likes sheep!"

—Washington correspondence to the New York World.
